#Foundation plants and avian community associations A set of survey data to examine key desert plant species associations with avian community structure and composition.

Hypothesis: There are associations between birds and foundation plant species such as shrubs and cacti, and these relationships change with phenology.

Predictions: 1. Abundance and diversity of birds is greater near foundation plant species. 2. Spring and summer seasons change the associations between the foundation plants and avian community. 3. Behaviour and functional diversity of the avian species also differ when in association with foundation plant species relative to open microsites.
